COURSE PRESENTATION

Prerequisite:

Students undertaking this course should normally have successfully completed at least one semester at university, or have equivalent experience. They must have some ability to work as a group and be able to communicate easily in English at a standard university level. In other respects, the course is intended to serve a mix of profiles and learning backgrounds for a more diverse international learning experience. No previous background in film studies is required.

Content:

This course will provide students with an overview of French cinema and the art of cinema more generally. Cinema was born in France, and continues to occupy a central position within French culture. We will thus examine various ways of 'reading' a film while viewing representative works from different periods of French cinematic history, with a special emphasis on the region of northern France.

Course sessions will include:

- introduction to cinema/film studies
- cinema history
- French cinema
- French culture and history
- critical approaches to film and film analysis
- literary adaptation
- analysis of assorted film clips and still photographs
- La Grande Illusion (Renoir, 1938: Grand Illusion): one of the greatest films ever made
- La Nuit Américaine (Truffaut, 1973: Day for Night): a great film about filmmaking

- Germinal (Berri, 1993): a faithful adaptation of Zola's 1885 masterpiece about a mining community in northern France
- Un long dimanche de fiançailles (Jeunet, 2004: A Very Long Engagement): a highly inventive adaptation (by the director of Amélie) of a best-selling novel combining war and romance
- Bienvenue chez les Ch'tis (Boon, 2008: Welcome to the Sticks): one of France's most popular films, and an essential introduction to the region
- Wrap-up and evaluation

Learning Outcomes:

By the end of the course, the students should be able to:

- understand how to read and analyse a film
- evaluate film as a social and cultural document
- outline the basic history of cinema in France
- recognize and use some of the essential terminology of film-making and cinema studies
